Setting the Scene

Margate was once a small fishing village. 'Meregate' had a large, partly 12th-century church – St John's – set on a hill with a track leading down to a cluster of houses around the harbour. The local fishing industry gave way to an increasing popularity for sea bathing in the 1730s, which sparked the growth of Margate as a fashionable resort, praised for its fine sand that extends several miles on either side of the original harbour. Hoyes, or sailing vessels, later steamships and eventually trains all brought visitors down to its restorative coastline from London.

Dating to the 1700s and with a number of uses throughout its life, the building now sits as a grand Georgian home in the centre of the town.

The Grand Tour

This home's pastel-blue exterior is studded with large sash windows and has ornate white moulding on its upper levels. A series of red chimney pots rest atop the house, one of them positioned above discreet signage from the house's earlier incarnation as The New Inn.

Entry to the house is via a glass-panelled timber door, washed in midnight blue and flanked by two matching windows. Three stained-glass fanlights rest above, and a pretty lantern hangs outside the door.

Inside, an expansive space has separate areas for sitting and dining, with the kitchen towards the rear. Light pours into the room through large sash windows, creating a wonderfully bright space. Dark floorboards run underfoot, while exposed timber beams and early brickwork remain. A study is tucked away behind the dining room and has access to the garden.

In the farmhouse-style kitchen, a butler sink is inset into wood-panelled joinery and framed by black and white metro tiling. Tall open shelving provides storage space, and a door unfolds onto the courtyard garden beyond.

A set of stairs with a white-painted balustrade winds up to the first floor, where there is a voluminous double reception room. The space is currently divided into two distinct sitting areas, both bathed in natural light from large sash windows. Walls have been painted in eggshell blue, while panelling decorates the lower sections.

There is a bright bedroom on this floor, with a cast-iron fireplace and a sash window. Here, walls are picked out in a light mustard yellow. A spacious bathroom with WC also sits on the first floor, and has built-in storage.

Four additional bedrooms are found on the second floor. The principal bedroom sits at the front of the plan, and has a fireplace with an exposed brick chimney breast. Each bedroom is illuminated by large sash windows.

There is a large bathroom with a fireplace and a roll-top bathtub on this floor. Here, walls have been painted in a neutral grey tone to create a soothing and tranquil space.

The lower-ground floor is occupied by a large cellar.

The Great Outdoors

A short flight of steps descends from the kitchen to a spacious courtyard garden, embraced by brick walls and fencing to create a peaceful sanctuary. Trees and shrubbery border the garden, and there is ample space for outdoor dining, as well as a private parking space behind rolled shuttering. There is also gated parking to the side of the house.

An adjoining barn with black weatherboarded frontage is also part of the sale, and has approved planning to be converted into a 2-bedroom, residential annex. Details of the application can be found here.

Out and About

The seaside town of Margate is renowned for its creative community, exemplified by Turner Contemporary. Synonymous with the town and visually unmistakable, the building was designed by architect David Chipperfield. It is a brilliant art space, with far-reaching views over the sea, named after landscape painter J. M. W. Turner, who went to school in Margate and would later return to the town throughout his life. He called its skies and sunsets “the loveliest in Europe”. Bolstering Margate’s thriving artistic scene, Carl Freedman Gallery and The Tracey Emin Foundation/TKE Studios are both within a 10-minute walk of the house.
